

Master Theses Guidelines by Professor Bajorath:

"The Life Science Informatics Examination Committee is developing new guidelines for master thesis projects. Due to recurrent difficulties in completing master thesis projects in external institutions in a timely and fully transparent manner, LSI students are asked from now on to first apply for master thesis projects in research groups that participate in the LSI teaching program or groups that collaborate or are in direct contact with LSI teaching faculty. A list of research groups belonging to the LSI teaching faculty is attached. Going forward, master thesis projects in external research groups that are not part of the LSI faculty or not collaborators will only be considered and approved on an exceptional basis or if no appropriate master thesis project can be found in the LSI-associated groups. The Examination Committee will make final decisions in these cases. External master theses projects that have already been approved are not affected by these new guidelines."
